Federal Communications Commission
Office of the Secretary

Democratic commissioner Michael Copps said the FCC decision will "preserve voice competition in the local markets and allow it to grow."

Republican commissioner Kevin Martin, who voted with the panel's two Democrats to shift authority from the federal government to the states, said the decisions "will have a direct impact on consumers." Spoken like a true democrat, you sir are a democrat in republicans clothing.

You expect the local companies to pay for the upkeep of the network.. It's only going to get worse
